

Thinking About Studying Abroad?

Get the Roadmap and you will learn:

- Why you should study abroad
- How to decide where to go
- How other students pay for it
- What to do once you get there

Enter your email address...

Send me the video!

First Blog Post: How To Afford Studying Abroad, With Dan Colleran

Dan is a study abroad advisor at the University of Wisconsin - Whitewater. He talks about the importance of studying abroad and how he helps students through the

Share this:

f Facebook 322
t Twitter
✉ Email
r Reddit

Recommendations and Resolutions for 2016 - Kevin Rose and Tim Ferriss

00:16:07 01:15:27

HELLO
my name is

Chris Carlton

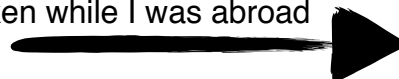

I studied abroad and absolutely loved it. My trip gave me memories, independence, and a global mindset. I was an average student at a pretty good school, but parlayed my experience into jobs that I couldn't have imagined getting without it. Studying abroad makes poor students good and good students great.

I think the system is outdated and overpriced though. I wanted to create a fresh perspective on the process. Enter the Study Abroadcast, a place where students can get answers to questions like:

- How can I afford it?
- Where should I go?
- What program should I use?
- How do I add this on my resume?
- When is the best time to go?
- Anything and everything in between

The pictures from this website were taken while I was abroad

Your study abroad advisor. It's travel agent 2.0, except you don't have to pay and they actually care about your experience. When planning your trip; visit early, visit often.

The Study Abroadcast. Yes, I am listing my own website as a resource. Why? Because there aren't many alternatives. Programs like CEA and AIFS provide great information and tools, but you have to apply and sign up with their service to use them. Blogs are scant, and most of the brochures you find in your school's study abroad office are trying to sell you something.

I read this book before I studied abroad and took it with me when I left. Filled with inspiring quotes and clever insights into long term travel, Vagabonding forces you take on the mindset of a traveler and abandon that of a tourist.

Despite it's small copy and lack of pictures, studyabroad.com is packed with information about studying abroad. You just have to be disciplined enough to take the time and actually read it.

chris@studyabroadsmarter.com